MicroWorld crosses 1 million customers Talk Back?

CRN Network, April 13, 2006

Security Solutions from software firm MicroWorld Technologies have registered its customer base to grow beyond one million.

MicroWorld has developed a technology named MWL (MicroWorld Winsock Layer) to power its products and it empowers eScan and MailScan to clean files at the socket level and the company claims that it saves the need to write the data to temporary folders before scanning.

Govind Rammurthy, CEO, MicroWorld Technologies, said, "Being a comprehensive security solution addressing a vast spectra of threats, and still remain the most advanced in each of those segments at the same time, may look like tight-rope walk, especially at a time when niche products are booming."

"Crossing the one million mark is a huge milestone in our endeavor to secure the web for computer users. But it also reminds us about the vast majority who still remain unprotected and under protected from various threats. I'm sure we will draw inspiration from this breakthrough, to spread our security cover in length and breadth in order to add real confidence to computing for them," he added.

While MicroWorld continues to grow at a supersonic rate in US, Europe and Asia Pacific region, it's finding huge demand in Middle East and Far East as well.
